

Heroes of War

REMEMBERING ALUMNI AND FACULTY WHO LOST THEIR LIVES IN SERVICE TO OUR NATION

Memorial Day, originally known as Decoration Day, was first proclaimed on May 5, 1868, by General John Logan, national commander of the Grand Army of the Republic, and was first observed on May 30 of that year when flowers were placed on the graves of Union and Confederate soldiers at Arlington National Cemetery. Since 1971, Memorial Day has been observed on the last Monday in the month of May. Originally, the observance honored fallen veterans of the Civil War. Subsequently, it was broadened to encompass casualties of any American war or military action.

Memories of war remain etched in the minds of many American veterans, their families, and their friends. We are aware of 33 members of our community who perished in the World War II, Korean, or Vietnam eras. Of these, 26 alumni lost their lives during World War II, four of them among the 36 graduates in the Class of 1941. At that time, Country Day's total enrollment was less than 200, and by 1943, more than 250 of the school's 500 alumni were in the armed forces, suggesting the magnitude of the war's impact on a school so much smaller than it is today. Recognition of all of these sacrifices helps sharpen our understanding of textbook accounts of military actions which now seem long ago and far away.

For today's students of Mary Institute and Saint Louis Country Day School, it is important to remember that a number of those profiled on the following pages saw military action immediately after graduating from our school while still in their teens; others broke off their CDS studies early to join the service. Some walked the very same corridors that we use today. As students, decades ago they too struggled through exams and gazed out the classroom window, anticipating the Burroughs game or what life held for them. These veterans' dreams and aspirations were sacrificed so that members of future generations could be assured of the chance to realize theirs. We recall these heroes today with pride, honor, and respect.
